Understanding the role of Eu policy-making in the everyday life of Europe's citizens. What are these policies about? Who is shaping them? What do they mean for the future? These are the questions that this book answers. The authors argue that some policies are implemented more easily than others, and that the nature of the political system varies greatly among different EU countries. This book offers an accessible introduction to understanding the aims and functions of all the main institutions of the European Union, giving a summary of the system's basic principles and structures, and describing its actors, procedures, and outcomes. The book is divided into sections that provide an overview of the main institutions and key actors, a detailed analysis of the key policies, and a discussion of the future of the European Union. The authors argue that the European Union is vital to understanding how it functions. This book provides students with a user-friendly guide to understanding the basic realities and rationales, as well as some of the dilemmas, behind EU policy-making.

Understanding Conflicts of Sovereignty in the EU

Understanding the future of Europe in the context of national and European sovereignty remains strikingly under-researched in political science. This book bridges this gap by providing both theoretical foundations and empirical analyses of the nature of conflicts of sovereignty in the European Union.

National Interest Organizations in the EU Multilevel System: Rainer Eising 2020-05-21 Political scientists have always accorded interest organizations a prominent place in European Union (EU) policy-making because they can act to influence EU institutions and citizens and provide important information to EU policy-makers and resources that impact on the problem-solving capacity of EU policies. In other words, they are vital to both the input legitimacy and the output legitimacy of the EU. For so, research on interest organizations in EU policy-making has concentrated on EU-level interest organizations and EU-level politics. This edited book draws attention to the role national interest organizations play in the EU multilevel system. All contributions present analyses of national EIOMs in the EU, their role in representing and delegating power in the EU, and their role in influencing EU policies, foreign policy and security policy, and justice and home affairs. Arguing that no single theory offers a completely convincing explanation of integration and differentiation in the EU, the authors put forward a new analytical perspective for describing and explaining the institutions and policies of the EU and their development over time. Written by a team of prominent scholars in the field, this thought-provoking book presents a new synthesis of integration theory and an original way of thinking about what the EU is and how it works.

Policy Making in the European Union - Policy Making and Implementation Helge Bokbuş 2002-07-18 Seminar paper from the year 2002 to the subject Politics - International Politics - Topics: European Union, grade: -, London School of Economics and Political Science, Emma J. Whalley. The European Union (EU) as a 'soft power', scholars of International Relations (IR) have found it difficult to identify a simple theoretical framework to explain the making of European Foreign Policy (FP). The reasons for this apparent failure of rigorous theory-building may be twofold. On the one hand, there is still much debate about what the EU - the ontological object of inquiry - actually is. On the other hand, many analysts have taken a 'pragmatic attitude' to the study of EU foreign policy, eschewing grand conceptualizations as to how we can best theorise EFP. Though detailed analyses of the specific pattern of the EU's external relations have been written, there is still a need to integrate these findings into a broader, more coherent and theoretically coherent back to the nature of EFP itself. It is often argued that the EU is a political system 'a uni- generic', a complex structure that is neither a state nor a non-state actor, and neither a conventional international organization nor an intergovernmental institution. The book argues that the EU is an international organization, and should be characterised as a hybrid political sphere that does not easily lend itself to classical Foreign Policy Analysis (FPA). This book provides a major contribution to the emerging and controversial policy-making field of EU foreign policy studies - which might not be assessed soon - I focus on the binding regulations of the Amsterdam Treaty. After a short theoretical introduction, the book is divided into three parts. Chapter one is dedicated to the EU context - as I would like to present to the reader a broader picture of the whole EU policy-making process. This chapter is the central question posed in this essay: Which theory best explains the making of European foreign policy? And if there is no single theoretical paradigm, might there be any potential

Managing Europe from Home-Scott James 2013-07-19 As one of the longest serving prime ministers in Europe, Tony Blair and Bertie Ahern were in power during one of the most tumultuous periods of European integration. This book offers a unique and fascinating insight into how they responded to the demands and opportunities of European integration in their respective countries. Drawing on previously-unpublished material, this book shows the dynamic ways in which they attempted to reconcile the major pressures on their government and their personal political convictions as to how we can best theorise EFP. Though detailed analyses of the specific pattern of the EU's external relations have been written, there is still a need to integrate these findings into a broader, more coherent and theoretically coherent back to the nature of EFP itself. Goveriance in the European Union—Gary Marks 1996-05-21 A fresh alternative to traditional state-centred analyses of the process of European integration is presented in this book. World-renowned scholars analyze the state in terms of its component parts and clearly show the interaction of subnational, national and supranational actors in the emerging European polity. This ‘multi-level politics’ approach offers a powerful lens through which to view the future course of European integration. The contributors’ empirical exploration of areas such as regional governance, social policy and social movements underpins their broad conceptual and theoretical framework providing significant new insight into European politics.

Environmental Policy-Making In Britain, Germany and the European Union—Ridgler K. W. Wurzel 2006-08-08 This book explains why national conflicts have arisen and how they are resolved at EU level by focusing on the Europeanisation of air and water pollution control.

Shaping EU Policy from Below—Simona Piattoni 2015-09-25 This book looks at the way in which the Committee of the Regions (CoR) can influence EU policy making from below, despite its relatively weak position in the decision-making process. Bringing together theoretical arguments about the central role of the formation of judgment in addition to the more conventionally emphasized expression of will, with an up-to-date account of the CoR’s institutional development and activities, Simona Piattoni and Jörn Schönlau make a strong case not to overlook the significance of the Committee’s contribution to EU-level democracy.

Europe in 12 Lessons—Pascal Fontaine 2018 What purpose does the EU serve? Why and how was it set up? How does it work? What has it already achieved for its citizens, and what new challenges does it face today? In a globalised world, can the EU compete successfully with other major economies while maintaining its social standards? How can immigration be managed? What will Europe’s role be on the world stage in the years ahead? Where will the EU’s boundaries be drawn? And what future is there for the euro? These are just some of the questions explored by EU expert Pascal Fontaine in this 2017 edition of his popular booklet Europe in 12 lessons. Pascal Fontaine is a former assistant to Jean Monnet and former professor at the Institut d’Études Politiques, Paris.

Bureaucrats as Law-makers—Frank M. Häge 2012-07-19 The Council of Ministers is one of the most powerful institutions of the European Union (EU) and plays a major role in the European policy-making process. Drawing on formal theory and combining quantitative and qualitative methods in an innovative fashion, this book provides novel insights into the role of national bureaucrats in legislative decision-making of the Council of the EU. The book examines and describes the Council of Ministers’ committee system and its internal decision-making process. Relying on a wide quantitative dataset as well as detailed case studies in the policy areas of Agriculture, Environment, and Taxation, it provides a comprehensive and systematic assessment of the extent to which national bureaucrats act as law-makers in the Council. It also examines the degree to which theories on collective decision-making, delegation, and international socialization can account for variation in the involvement of bureaucrats. Investigating how often and why national officials in working parties and committees, rather than ministers, make legislative decisions in the EU, this book addresses the implications of bureaucratic influence for the democratic legitimacy of Council decision-making. The author finds that ministers play a generally more important role in legislative decision-making than often assumed, alleviating, to some extent, concerns about the democratic legitimacy of Council decisions. Bureaucrats as Law-makers will be of interest to students, scholars and practitioners in the field of European Union politics and policy-making, legislative decision-making, intergovernmental negotiations and international socialization.

Environmental Policy in the EU—Andrew Jordan 2021-05-04 The European Union (EU) has a hugely important effect on the way in which environmental policies are framed, designed and implemented in many parts of the world, but especially Europe. The new edition of this leading textbook provides a state-of-the-art analysis of the EU’s environmental policies. Comprising five parts, Environmental Policy in the EU covers the rapidly changing context in which EU environmental policies are made, the key actors who interact to co-produce them and the most salient dynamics of policy making, ranging from agenda setting and decision making, through to implementation and evaluation. Written by leading international experts, individual chapters examine how the EU is responding to a multitude of different challenges, including biodiversity loss, climate change, energy insecurity, and water and air pollution. They tease out the different ways in which the EU’s policies on these topics co-evolve with national and international environmental policies. In this systematically updated fourth edition, a wider array of learning features are employed to ensure that readers fully understand how EU environmental policies have developed over the last 50 years and how they are currently adapting to the rapidly evolving challenges of the twenty-first century, including the COVID-19 pandemic. It is an essential resource for undergraduate and postgraduate students studying environmental policy and politics, climate change, environmental law and EU politics more broadly.
